Introduction

Anyone with a serious interest in political finance is likely to have heard, made, debunked, or wondered about claims that campaign finance laws “make a difference”. These claims may be about the influence that money has on who decides to run, how candidates campaign, who wins, how they behave in office, which donors or spending organizations wield power in the political system, and what policies come out in the end. These outcomes may be related to the laws for contributions, disclosure, public financing, or any of the dozens of the other provisions that may govern money in politics. Assessing the claims rigorously will often require a researcher to consider the way the rules in multiple jurisdictions have worked over time. Scholars typically have gathered information about the laws on an ad hoc basis to serve the needs of specific projects. These efforts can be time consuming, and the resulting collections are often not quite what the next scholar needs for the next research question – which typically means the next scholar will have to start over again.

The CFI historical database of state laws is meant to make such research easier. It is an extensive summary of the provisions in each of the fifty states’ campaign finance laws since 1996. (When combined with an earlier database for legislative elections constructed by Keith Hamm and Robert Hogan, some of the information can be taken back to 1976. More information about the Hamm and Hogan data set is available on the same website page as this codebook.) The summaries in this database take the form of hundreds of fields for each of the states, every two years. They include citations to the then-contemporary state codes for those who want to consult the underlying text, but the database standardizes most fields to facilitate comparative research. The fields themselves are descriptions of the statute law in effect for the election to be held that year or the state’s next regular election year. (For states with odd-numbered year elections, the laws in effect for an election will be listed with the preceding even-numbered year.)

The effort in this project was to present the facial meanings of statutes and not to rely on administrative interpretations. A lawyer advising a client therefore will normally need more detailed information than is available here. Judicial interpretations also are not included, with the exception of definitive rulings declaring a provision to be unconstitutional. If a law passed and was declared unconstitutional before an election, the law that was actually in effect for the election appears in the database.

This codebook describes all of the fields in the full database, which is available at no charge for downloading in standard electronic formats. A subset of the full database is also available in a visualized format on the Campaign Finance Institute’s website. The data behind these visualized components may also be downloaded in standard formats, in much smaller files. The fields included in the visualized version are marked with an asterisk in the full codebook. Visualized fields appear in the section of this codebook for Contribution Limits, Other Restrictions, Disclosure, and Public Financing/Tax Credits. There were no visualizations for the codebook’s first section (Definitions) or last (Agencies).

The fields in the full database come in six major sections:

(a) Definitions

This section offers definitions of many of the key technical terms used in campaign finance law – such as what counts as a contribution or expenditure in each state, what is a political committee or what is a political party. This is the most text-heavy section of the database. Because the entries do not lend themselves readily to shorthand summaries or yes/no answers, none of these appear in the online visualized version of the database.

(b) Contribution limits

This section is the longest in the codebook. It includes limits on contributions that come FROM individuals, political parties, political action committees (PACs), and others, and that go TO candidates (legislative and gubernatorial), political parties, PACs and others. It also includes prohibitions on corporate and labor contributions.

(c) Other restrictions

This section includes prohibitions on expenditures by corporations and labor unions, other prohibitions, and rules for contributions during a legislative session and for contributions by donors who do business with the state.

(d) Disclosure – by whom and of what

This section describes who is required to disclose the sources of their money and how they spend it, as well as the thresholds for reporting a specific donor's name, address and employer. It includes the requirements for candidates, parties, PACs and ballot initiative committees. Disclosure rules for independent spending and electioneering are included, as are the rules for mandatory electronic filing, advertising disclaimers, and disclosure to corporate shareholders.

(e) Public financing and tax credits.

Included here is the type of public funding available to candidates and political parties (if any) and associated spending limits (if any). Also included are fields describing tax deductions for political contributions, tax credits, or refunds/rebates.

(f) Agencies

Included here are the agencies responsible for administering the campaign finance laws in each state. This could include separate bodies for regulation, compliance, public financing, disclosure and other functions.

These sections will be described in the pages that follow. First will be a table of contents, with each line acting as a link to the detailed material. Each major section will begin with paragraphs describing what is there, followed by a detailed description of every one of the database's hundreds of fields.

1. DEFINITIONS

Laws often begin with sections defining the terms as they are to be used in a statute, rather than interspersing the definitions later. This database follows a similar practice.

The first three fields create an identifier for each record in the full database. Each record is uniquely identified by a code made up of the state's two-letter abbreviation immediately followed by four digits to signify the year.

The remaining fields in this section define a series of technical terms, including statutory exemptions. Explanations are also provided, together with citations.

IDENTIFIER	TEXT
This is a six-place TEXT identifier that combines the "STATE" variable (below) with the "YEAR" variable. Each state-year combination in record in the database. e.g. AL1996 refers to the Alabama state law in effect during 1996
STATE	TEXT
A two-place TEXT abbreviation for each of the 50 states. e.g. AL refers to Alabama
YEAR	INTEGER
The year in 4-place INTEGER format. Each set of laws is coded for the laws in effect during the indicated year. e.g. 1996 refers to the year 1996
LENGTHTERM_H	INTEGER
Number of years in a regular term of office for the House/Assembly
YEARNEXTELXN_H	INTEGER
Year of next regular election for the House/Assembly, starting with the year indicated in the "year" field.
LENGTHTERM_S	INTEGER
Number of years in a regular term of office for the Senate
YEARNEXTELXN_S	INTEGER
Year of next regular Senate election, starting with the year indicated in the "year" field.
LENGTHTERM_G	INTEGER
Number of years in a regular term of office for the Governor
YEARNEXTELXN_G	INTEGER
Next regular election for Governor, starting with the year indicated.

Definitions of terms

The first series of terms uses three different fields for each term.

One indicates whether the term is specifically defined in state law. The answer is are either yes or no.

The second provides a citation to the state code in effect for that year.

The third is a text field summarizing the definition, usually with quotations. These three fields are repeated for each of the following terms: candidate, contribution, political party, political committee (PAC), and political expenditure. The definition section ends with independent expenditures and electioneering. The field names and descriptions are as follows.

2. CONTRIBUTION LIMITS

LIMITS: Many states put limits on the amount of political campaign contributions that donors may give to recipients. These limits typically will be different for various categories of donors (such as individuals, political parties, or political committees). They also may vary for candidates running for different offices and they may vary if the recipient is a political committee or party. The standard field name for this long set of fields will follow this format: <LABEL FOR THE TYPE OF DONOR> TO <LABEL FOR THE TYPE OF RECIPIENT>.

COLAs: Because many state laws include cost of living adjustments (COLAs) for their contribution limits, a series of fields appear before the limits to indicate whether the state's law uses COLAs. If yes, the limits reported for any given year will be for the adjusted amount, including COLAs.

TIME PERIODS AND STANDARDIZATION: Where limits exist, the statute typically will say that a recipient may accept no more than a specific amount in the aggregate from a particular donor over the course of designated time period. The law will then say whether the limit is per year, per election, or per election cycle. If a donor is allowed to give a certain amount per year, then the donor may give twice as much during a two year election cycle. In some states, the donor may give six times during a six year term of office. However, if the law says that the limit is per election, then the donor typically may give that amount only once for a primary (even during a four-year or six-year term) and then again for a general election. This database presents the limits as they exist in state law, together with the time period in the law.

However, the database also creates a new field indicating the maximum amount that a donor may give over the course of a two-year election cycle during which there are two elections (a primary and general election, with no runoff or special election). This computed number lets the states' limits be compared directly to one another. It is the field we recommend using for comparative analysis. It is also the field chosen for visualization.

If a user is interested in how much a candidate may raise during a full term in office in one of the few states that express their contribution limits as being "per year", then the user should take the unstandardized contribution limit and multiply it by the number of years in a term. The number of years in a term may be found in the Definitions section of the database. One caution: sometimes a state may change a contribution limit in the middle of a four-year or six-year term of office. During a transitional period, the earlier contribution limit may apply to the earlier years with the later limit covering later years. This database only covers the two year period for each listed year in the database. Years in which a state changes its contribution limit may be seen easily in the database's visualization tool. The information is also available in the full database download.

SPECIAL LIMITS: This section indicates whether a state has special limits on contributions from lobbyists or people who do business with the government. The section also includes entries showing whether there is a ceiling on the aggregate amount a donor may give to all recipients combined.

PROHIBITIONS: Some states have prohibited contributions by certain entities (such as corporations, labor unions or foreign nationals). These are indicated at the end of the section on contributions, along with prohibitions that apply only to specific time periods (such as during a legislative session).

The fields for the contribution section of the database are as follows.

Field names with an asterisk (*) and highlighted are also included in the visualized website version.
